

Opening Educational Practices in Scotland (OEPS) is a Scottish Funding Council three-year project which promotes and facilitates best practice in open education in Scotland.

Follow the OEPS blog for regular updates on the progress of the project.

OEPSScotland at the Beach (CC BY 4.0, Ronald Macintyre)

New Open Courses

The OEPS project continues until 31 July 2017. Over the next six months we will be releasing a number of new free, open online courses designed and developed with partners from around Scotland. There is a summary of the courses we've released on the project website.

In September we announced the launch of Becoming an Open Educator. We are delighted to announce that this has now been joined on OpenLearn Works by How to make an open online course. This new badged open course explains how to design, structure and produce your own open online course. It was written by the Free Learning Team at The Open University and includes sections by the OEPS project team. You can find out more by going straight to the course or by reading the summary on the OEPS blog.

Sharing good practice resources

Over the course of the project we've worked with individuals and organisations to design, test and refine resources to support good practice. We aim to share all these resources in formats that make them useable and useful for practitioners across the sector. At the end of November we released all the materials from the popular Thinking About Open workshop. We'd welcome feedback on the way in which we are releasing resources. Do contact us via the project email box if you have any comments.

Contact us

<http://oepscotland.org>

@OEPSScotland

oepscotland@gmail.com

